GENERAL FACULTY BYLAWS

In June, 1952, the General Faculty of North Carolina State College took the first step toward creating an instrument of faculty government by approving a series of resolutions submitted by the local chapter of the American Association of University Professors. One of these resolutions requested that the Chancellor appoint a Committee on Government. It was the action of the General Faculty in June, 1954, approving that Committee's Report, which established the Faculty Senate. The Senate functioned for a trial period of five and a half years until February, 1960, when the General Faculty approved its continuation on an established basis. The General Faculty in December, 1961, adopted a set of Bylaws. Both the Report and the Bylaws were amended on subsequent occasions. On April 22, 1971, the General Faculty adopted a revised set of Bylaws, which incorporated and superseded the two earlier documents.
