Department Head
Acquisitions and Discovery
NCSU Libraries

Since November 2005, I have served in various non-tenure faculty positions at NC State University Libraries, all of these positions in the area of technical services, where I have assisted and led the acquisitions, cataloging, and electronic resources management of the Libraries' collections. In my current position as Department Head of Acquisitions and Discovery, I am responsible for the management of 23 faculty and staff who work diligently to ensure that library resources are licensed, acquired, and made discoverable to the NC State community. In my previous faculty position at Mississippi State University Libraries, I was in a tenure-track librarian position and participated in the promotion and tenure process. I continue to serve my professional community through service and as editor for the journal, Serials Review. My research interests include workflow management, electronic resources management systems, and organizational change. My interest in Faculty Senate stems from a desire for more direct exposure to faculty governance at NC State. I also hope to learn more about university programs that the Libraries can support, potentially leading to increased partnerships and greater alignment between the Libraries' services and university priorities and initiatives.
